Airport Business' Top 40 Under 40 — 2013

Young innovators ready aviation for the future

This issue of Airport Business is devoted to 40 aviation up and comers (actually 41 because we had a tie) under age 40. What an honor it is for those selected and what an asset these 41 are for our industry.

Last year in this space I wrote that, "Aviation needs young leaders—but only if we want to survive." I was dead serious about that. Show me a church, civic club, town, company or industry in which the average age is getting older with no influx of young members, and I'll show you a group that will either change or go under. That's truer this year than last, and will be even more important next year.

Of course our entire industry won't collapse if we get this wrong—just that part of the industry that doesn't adapt.

I'm proud that Airport Business publishes this list of "40 Under 40," thus providing much-needed appreciation for these young leaders. When an industry needs young leaders—and what industry doesn't?—it should let them and the world know that the industry appreciates them. If you know any of this year's selected 40, I hope you'll send them an email or other note of congratulations. After all, we want them to tell their friends in other industries how much they like their jobs.

I spoke for Women In Aviation this year, and was delighted to see that the aviation industry is showing up en masse to recruit employees among this young and dynamic group of women. During my presentation I urged the members to consider airport management as a career. Did your airport exhibit at Women In Aviation's annual conference this year? Perhaps you should next year. You can bet that your competition will be there recruiting.

If you think aviation changed during the last half-century, just sit back and wait. I really believe that the next 50 years will change more than the last 50 years as the world grows smaller and possibilities grow larger. We're going to need a lot of people—educated young people—to react to and handle opportunities and challenges.

Airport management requires more education, more smarts and more energy than ever before. Just dealing with leases, government rules and financing takes a lot of up-to-date know-how. We need a constant influx of young men and women educated and trained in many fields. One way to get them is by recognizing our best and brightest with honors like our annual "40 Under 40."

AGE 36 CYRUS T. CALLUM | ASSISTANT DIRECTOR, AIRPORT OPERATIONS
 GREATER ORLANDO AVIATION AUTHORITY

CYRUS T. Callum grew up by Stapleton International Airport but where most people would consider the noise of planes overhead a nuisance, Callum, who holds a private pilot's license, actually marveled at it and knew he wanted to be a part of the aviation industry one day. Later he became interested in airports and the ways they bring people together. "They bring families together, they bring troops back from overseas, they bring businesses together, and I just really wanted to be a part of that," he says.

Today he is. As the assistant director of Airport Operations for the Greater Orlando Aviation Authority (GOAA), his responsibilities include coordinating plans, policies and procedures in addition to administrative, budgetary and operational issues.

Callum joined the Aviation Authority in 2008 as the Manager of its Noise Abatement Program. In his current role he manages Landside and Terminal Operations, the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) Compliance program, Aviation Technical systems and other special projects.

Prior to joining GOAA, Callum held multiple positions in operations, planning and business development at the Jacksonville Aviation Authority; Reynolds, Smith and Hills Inc.; Landrum & Brown Inc.; and the Denver International Airport.

Callum, an American Association of Airport Executives (A.A.A.E.) accredited airport executive, serves as an at-large examiner on the A.A.A.E. Board of Examiners, which is responsible for oversight and development of the Accreditation Program for those seeking the Accredited Airport Executive (A.A.E.) designation. He is an active member of the Southeast Chapter of the A.A.A.E. Callum, also an Airport Certified Employee (A.C.E.) in Operations, served as the first chair of this chapter's information and communication committee, linking it to social media. He is also an adjunct professor at Everglades University, teaching various subjects for the Bachelor's and Master's degree programs in aviation management, for which he was named Professor of the Year in 2010.
