What's Next For New Orleans' Old Airport Terminal?

By Jennifer Larino, NOLA.com | The Times-Picayune

The Times-Picayune

As the New Orleans airport gets ready to move new $1 billion airport terminal in May 2019 into an entirely, one big question remains: What happens to the old airport facility?

The New Orleans Aviation Board kicked off the public discussion about the future of the old terminal at its Thursday (Nov. 15) meeting, after listening to a presentation from a consultant hired to help with the process. It will be months, possibly a year or more, before any final decisions are made about what to do with the old facility.

The early takeaways? Large parts of the current airport terminal, including the long-dormant Concourse A and aging Concourse B, currently dedicated to Southwest Airlines, would be costly and complicated to rehab for a new use, said Hugh Murphy, executive vice president of Jones Lang LaSalle, the hired consultant.
